PARAGRAPHS OF INTEREST.

DENATIALIZED.

I know a little maiden,
From Paris just returned—
A three months' trip—yet laden
Her head with follies, learned
II.
In Europe's famous city,
She calls it now "Paris,"
And even more the city—
For Mary signs "Marie."
III.
In manner she is bolder,
She calls it "pronounced,"
The French in slang of shoulder,
In gesture, every way.
IV.
She wears French heels; her dresses
Are French; her waist is strained;
Her bright and golden tresses
Late French twists are trained.
V.
She fond of French made dishes,
Prefers "de son cote,"
The "noble d'hotel"—and wishes
"La Carte" were done away.
VI.
She reads French novels, Greville;
She dotes upon Voltaire;
But never heard of Corneille,
Pascal, or Moliere.
VII.
French opera is "charming,"
Of Offenbach, Hervey,
She raves in style alarming,
And thinks herself "an fait."
VIII.
She's half forgotten English—
Or can it be from choice,
An "accent" you'd distinguish,
In listening to her voice?
IX.
She's even so French, she clearly
Pure English cannot speak,
And writes her address, really,
"A Boston, d'Assommoir."
—Burlington Hawk Eye.

THE "BURLINGTON HAWKEYE" MAN SHARK-CATCHING.

Burdette, the Burlington Hawkeye humorist, gives the following account of how he caught a shark off Nantucket:

It is fun. A delightful sail of nine miles brought us to the fishing grounds. We anchored off Green Point and destroyed a lunch big enough for a militia company. This was one of the pleasantest numbers in the programme and would have been enjoyed had there been anything left. Then we caught sharks.

There is a great iron hook, with two feet of chain fastened to it, and the rest is a line strong enough to pull a cotton wood stump. You load the hook with bludge, then let it sink to the bottom, and wait in tranquility and patience for a bite. The shark takes hold of a bait in a mean, sneaking, grinding way, so though he didn't care much about it and believed you were a liar anyhow, and only took it because he thought he was stealing it. He has to roll over before he can take the bait at all, and as he knocks it with his nose in this movement, you are notified that your first shark is following your hook, and if you are like me, you want to "hollo" right away. By-and-bye there is a gentle tug at the hook, very easy and very slow, and you begin to wonder if some Miss-slip catfish hasn't lost himself down here. Then the shark starts away with the bait, you let him run a yard or so, give him a little slack, and with one mighty jerk fasten the hook in him, and haul in.

That is where the entertainment begins. The curtain is rung up with a flourish of trumpets, three ruffles of the drums, red fire from both wings, and thunder and lightning in the distance. If you ever lived on a farm and led a reluctant cow to turn when she wanted to go into the woods on both sides of the road and climb trees, you know about what it is to haul in a shark. You yell at the time. Must yell, from the time the hook catches until the shark is in; or you'll never get him. And the rest of the crew help you. They shout encouraging remarks at you. Hand over hand you tug in the line. Inch by inch the shark takes it out. You rally and brace your feet against the gunwale, and in he comes again. You think you must have about five hundred fathoms of line out. You begin to wish you were a windlass. You puff, and yell, and pant, and howl, and strain, and shout, and pull, and shriek, and sweat, and wall, and surge, and haul, and yank, and all the time that provoking shark is just holding back with the steady, unswerving, aggravating reluctance of a July hillside, and over and through your own inarticulate shouts you can hear the rest of the crew yell.

"Lift him up, judge, lift him right out of the water!"
"Hang on to him, Hawkeye, raise him, raise him!"
"Puff louder, colonel, and you'll fetch him!"
"Robbie," chimed in her little serene highness from her lofty seat, "don't step on your eyes."

And indeed, my organs of vision were standing out, and looking at each other, in great amazement over the top of my nose, having never seen each other before, and being great surprised to find they were twins.
But pretty soon, just as you have made up your mind that you can't pull another pound, the great ugly body of the shark looms up in sight; then you see the glassy eyes and the smiling mouth, the rows of pointed teeth; the yelling and shouting is redoubled. Captain William catches the chain and the shark's head is held above the water, while Captain Alexander with a huge South Sea war club pounds the shark on the nose. One or two thumps with that mighty club is sufficient, for the shark is vitally sensitive about his nose, and we had the monster on board. It is my first shark, and it is nine feet long and will weigh about 400 pounds.

That is several feet taller than I am.
In the calm majesty of success I tilt my hat forward and a little port, until it rests easily on one ear and the tip of my nose. Then I look haughtily out over the dancing waters of the blue Atlantic and wait for another shark, while I graciously receive the sarcastic congratulations and praises of the admiring crew.

AN ANTI-FEVER TREE.
In New York some very positive statements are made as to the value of the encyclopaedia, or blue-gum tree of Tasmania, in destroying fevers in malarial districts. The testimony in support of this power is said to be most convincing. In malarial districts near encyclopaedia forests fever seems to be unknown, and in parts of Corsica and Algeria where the tree has been planted for the sake of its reputed virtue epidemic fevers have been stamped out. St. Glens, in a report to the French academy, instances the case of a farm situated in a pestiferous district about twenty miles from Algiers, where by planting a number of trees the character of the atmosphere was entirely changed. Similar testimony comes from Holland, the south of France, Italy, California and many other parts of the world, as to the fever-destrorying attributes of this tree.

In no case is the evidence more convincing than in that of Algeria, as related by Dr. Santra, and, quite recently, by General Playfair. Large tracts of land have been transformed by the agency of the "fever-destrorying tree," as it has come to be called, and wherever it is cultivated fevers are said to decrease in frequency and intensity. Fever districts in Europe have a more evil reputation than the Campagna, as a veritable hotbed of pestiferous fever, and people who know the country around Rome may remember the malarial fever of the Pontine marshes, as tradition tells, that St. Paul met his death. Life in the malarial marshes is said to be the most deadly, but since the encyclopaedia has been planted in the districts fever has disappeared and the place has become habitable.

THE UNITED STATES SUPERFERRITY IN RAILROADS.
There are in the world over 300,000 miles of railroad nearly one-half of which, or 150,000 miles, are in the United States. Europe has nearly 100,000, and the remainder of the world only about 25,000 miles. There are, however, more miles of railroad to the square mile (one mile of road to every forty square miles of area) in the United States than there are in Europe (one mile of road to forty-four square miles). In the United States there is a mile of railroad to every 800 people, in Europe a mile to every 3,471 persons; which, of course, is only another way of saying that the European railroads run through far denser populations than those of the United States; but, on the other hand, the populations of Europe do not travel as many miles annually as do the people of the United States; and although there are six times as many people in Europe as in the United States, they have only 12,000 miles of railroad.

In Asia 30,000 people, in Africa 9,000, have only a mile each, while in Australia there is one mile of railroad to every 1,100 square miles and 1,040 people; and Canada is very little better off than Australia. So that the people of the United States patronize the railroads more than the people of any other and every other country.

SONG OF THE MOTHER ELEPHANT.
Let me hold you in my trunk,
Baby mine, baby mine,
For with happiness I'm drunk,
Baby mine.
And I feel that up to date
No mammiferous vertebrate
Ever reached my blissful state,
Baby mine.
I behold in you the germ,
Baby mine, baby mine,
Of a noble pachyderm,
Baby mine.
For you're sweeter than a ram,
And as pretty as a lamb—
Most as pretty as I am,
Baby mine.

All your elephantine ways,
Baby mine, baby mine,
Will be watched in deep amazement,
Baby mine.
And they wouldn't sell you now
For your weight in gold, I trow
No, my poppy-woppy-wow,
Baby mine.
You have knocked the last pretence,
Baby mine, baby mine,
Out of scientific gents,
Baby mine.
Who presumed to say what one's
And what can be done—no one's—
By a female elephant,
Baby mine.
